The purpose of Historic Hawai'i Foundation shall be to preserve and encourage the preservation of historic buildings, objects, and sites relating to the history of Hawai'i; to promote an awareness of and respect for all that is historically significant and architecturally distinctive about our state; and through these efforts, to keep alive and intact for the enrichment of present and future generations the inherent beauty of the Hawaiian Islands and its unique historic role in the development of the Pacific Basin.

-Article II, By-laws

PREFACE

Historic Hawai'i Foundation is a statewide historic preservation action organization. The nonprofit group was founded in 1974 and now has more than 2,000 individual, corporate and organizational members. The foundation works actively to preserve and promote awareness of the historical and architectural heritage of the islands through education programs, financial incentives, planning, legislation, and serving as a catalyst and resource for individual and community efforts.

Historic Hawai'i News was introduced in September 1975, as a vital part of the foundation's efforts to inform the public about Hawai'i's historic sites and preservation activities. To accomplish this, Historic Hawai'i News became an outlet for quality research documenting many of our islands' most precious cultural resources, linking the past with the present.

In recognition of the contribution it made to Hawai'i's written history, the publication was upgraded to a magazine format in April 1986, under the new banner of Historic Hawai'i magazine. The magazine size and heavier paper stock are more durable, easier to read and more easily referred to in schools, libraries, businesses and homes.

Countless volunteer hours went into preparing and verifying information, often by top professionals in their fields or by individuals with special ties to, and thus special knowledge of, a specific place. Some articles represent the culmination of years of patient research in collections across the state; others are condensations of book-length technical reports. Illustrations were secured from sources both public and private. As a result, Historic Hawai'i magazine contains much information not easily found elsewhere, especially in concise form. The index of issues for the first ten years was published in 1985, and was prepared to make this valuable information more readily accessible on a wider basis to foundation staff, members and the public. This second index volume continues, making five more years of issues accessible.

There are literally hundreds of people who deserve recognition for their advice and support on the issues covered in this index, but especially former editors, dedicated members of the Publication Committee, and the talented writers and photographers whose contributions went into each issue.

The foundation is grateful to Linda Wiig for her work indexing 1985, which is included in this second volume, and to Valerie Reynerson for completing the second volume, bringing the index of Historic Hawai'i magazine up to the close of the decade. Historic preservation is more than preserving buildings and sites for future generations; it is also passing on the knowledge of that for which those sites stand.

Dion-Magrit Coschigano
Vice-president, Education & Communication

NOTES TO THE INDEX USER

SCOPE

The scope of the newspaper and magazine, and likewise the index, covers preservation activities and history relating to Hawai'i's historic buildings, sites, places, objects and culture.

Subjects relating to the architectural, economic, educational, financial and legal aspects of preservation also have been indexed.

The names of persons indexed include those historically related to a building or site, such as architects and early owners; historically important persons, such as kings or early business leaders; and recipients of Historic Hawai'i Foundation awards. Organizations and government agencies involved in preservation or related activities have been indexed. Authors of articles have not been indexed.

Not all reports concerning placement of buildings or sites on the Hawai'i or National Register of Historic Places were indexed. Up-to-date placement information is available from the Hawai'i State Historic Preservation Office.

This index covers all issues of Historic Hawai'i News and Historic Hawai'i magazine from January 1985 through December 1989. The change from newspaper to magazine format took place with the April 1986 issue. There was no change in indexing methods or format as a result. Beginning in 1986, the April issue of the magazine was replaced with an annual report for the previous year. (These issues are titled "Annual Report" and not identified as the April issue, but can be located between the March and May issues in bound volumes of magazines. Entries in the index for these issues are identified as follows: 1986 ANNUAL RPT (1987 APR)). The magazine was published 12 times per year, except for 1985 (11) and 1989 (11).

ENTRIES (Depth of indexing)

The entries lead to different quantities (three levels) of information, ranging from an extensive article of several pages in length to a small piece of useful information as short as a sentence. This method of indexing was designed to meet the needs of the Historic Hawai'i Foundation staff and volunteers for whom the smallest mention of certain information is often valuable. It is hoped that this approach will also enable the index to be of use even to persons who do not have access to a full set of back issues.

Preservation news is entered succinctly, and for articles which also contain significant historical information, a separate entry labeled "History" or "Brief history" is entered in addition to the news entry. "Biographical information" also received a separate entry. Titles were not used as entries. Brackets are used to include relevant information that otherwise does not fit into index format, such as errors in articles that were not corrected in a later issue.

The three levels of indexing are:

1) ENTRIES FOR COMPREHENSIVE ARTICLES

An asterick (*) marks articles (usually lengthy) which were felt to be of long-range research value to both preservationists and general researchers. For these articles, the author's name (or Anon.) is provided in parenthesis.

2) ENTRIES FOR OTHER ARTICLES

Short and/or less comprehensive articles. The author's name is not recorded.

3) ENTRIES FOR BRIEF REFERENCES

The presence of a column designator, e.g. "a", "b", "c" (referring to columns of print) or the word "cap" (illustration caption) indicates a very short piece of information, ranging from a short paragraph to a single sentence.

HEADINGS

The selected, or preferred, form of names or subjects is printed in upper-case letters; non-selected forms are printed in lower-case letters and cross-referenced to their selected form.

"See" references lead from a non-selected form of the heading to the selected form.

"See also" references lead to narrower or related headings.

"See under" references lead from a non-selected narrow heading to a selected broader heading.

For buildings, preference was given to the name which appears on the facade; for houses preference was usually given to the original owner's name. Commonly used variant names are sometimes included in brackets after the selected form.

Occasionally a building which was not considered important enough to have its own heading is entered only under its place name.

A + symbol is used after a building name to indicate that the structure is no longer extant. (Note that in the 1975-84 index, a dagger serves this purpose, and is placed within parenthesis with the location.)

LOCATION

A building or site's location is enclosed in parenthesis following its name. If a structure has been moved from one location to another, the former and present locations are both listed with the word "to" in between, e.g. "(a to b)".

Names of building (except houses) can be accessed by type, e.g. CHURCHES, COURTHOUSES, HOTELS, etc., but not by place. Maps when listed under a place name, are useful in determining an area's buildings or sites.

HAWAIIAN LANGUAGE USAGE

In accordance with the editorial policy of Historic Hawai'i magazine, diacritical marks have been used for all Hawaiian words. (See "Notes on Modern Usage of Hawaiian Language" on page vii.) However, due to its dense format and because its production level was not as high as that of the magazine, italicization or underlining is not used in the index.

ILLUSTRATIONS

The types of entries used are:

- Photo
- Photo, detail
- Photo, interior
- Drawing
- Map
- Painting
- Floor plan

The entries for "Drawing" include renderings, blueprints and cartoons. No indication of the date of an illustration has been provided in the index.

If a building, etc., was not considered important enough to be entered under its own heading, an illustration of that building may be entered under its place name. The entry would not necessarily give the name of the building, but may read "Photo (stores)", or "Photo (houses)", etc.

NOTES ON MODERN USAGE OF THE HAWAIIAN LANGUAGE

By Robert Lokomaika'iokalani Snakenberg
Hawaiian Language Advisor, Historic Hawai'i Foundation

Readers will see many Hawaiian words used in Historic Hawai'i News and Historic Hawai'i magazine. These few notes are to explain Hawaiian language usage being promoted and taught by the majority of professional Hawaiian language instructors in Hawai'i today.

Although it is an ingrained practice for many kama'āina today to pluralize Hawaiian words with the English "s" when they are using English, this is contrary to correct Hawaiian usage. Plurals in Hawaiian are denoted by markers or particles such as mau or nā but the form of the noun itself does not change between singular and plural. Therefore you should not see "hales", "heiaus" or "kuleanas" in Historic Hawai'i News or magazine or in this index except in this sentence!

Historic Hawai'i News and magazine have been using the 'okina or glottal stop (') consistently since 1980. 'Okina are inserted in proper names and quoted in text if traditional pronunciation is known. More recently we have also started using the kahako or macron (¯) indicating long vowel sounds.

You might see the use of hyphens in the Pūku'i-Elbert Hawaiian Dictionary or Place Names of Hawai'i but these are used lexigraphically to show the separate common word elements that make up a Hawaiian proper noun and should not be used in normal spelling.

Some Hawaiian proper nouns used for place names may be written separately such as Pu'u o Maui, whereas others might be all run together as in Haleakāla or Pu'upueo. There is less standardization here and modern usage tends to depend on the original spellers of a place name since the sound to the ear is the same whether it is written as one word or several.

Words like ma uka and ma kai are spelled separating the two major elements, the preposition ma (toward) and the location word uka (upland) and kai (sea). This does not affect the traditional pronunciation of these words.

Since Hawaiian words are foreign to the English language context of Historic Hawai'i News and magazine, the words are generally italicized. This is the same editorial usage as with foreign words from any other language. Although words like aloha, lei and poi are now found in some English dictionaries and are frequently used by English language speakers, these are still Hawaiian words and we will italicize them.

Proper names are not used generally for their Hawaiian language meaning but rather to identify a specific person or place, and therefore they are not italicized.

This policy of italicization began with the May 1983 issue and was made possible at the production level by a switch to a typeface that contains both standard and italic characters in the same font.
