Hawai'i Island

- Totally Bond memorial library in Kapa'au been waiting 9 years for the State to act so we can proceed to save this building!
- Mauna Kea
- Keauhou Bay; birthplace of King Kamehameha III.
- The site of the Battle of Kuamo'o, south of Keauhou.
- Keolanahihi/Heahealani complex, Kailua Kona.
- The entire West Hawai'i coastline. There are so many ancient fishing settlements that have yet to be discovered. Some have been absorbed into huge parcels of privately owned property of individuals who barely spend a week each year in Hawai'i.
- Kamehameha Hall in Keaukaha, Hilo, a property stewarded by the Royal Order of Kamehameha.

Kaua'i

- Gulick-Rowell House
- Hā'ena, all the beachfront lots currently being developed threaten iwi kupuna and the beach.
- Hanalei and Hanalei bridges
- Nā Pali Coastline -- sacred sites, flora, fauna, etc.
- Polihale State Park because of the recent media coverage showing illegal camping on site.
- Wailua River area

Maui

- The buildings at the old Pu'unene mill including the buildings from the plantation, not just the mill itself.
- Nu'u, Makena, Old Maui High School.
- Ka'ahumanu Church, Wailuku.
- Former WW2 military sites on Maui along the shoreline and in the sugar cane fields.
- 'Tao Valley, the burials across Maui nui, and Maui's historic North Shore sites.

Moloka'i

Kalaupapa

- Ala Moana Park
- All the early 20th century single-walled bungalows so typical of our older Honolulu neighborhoods. They are deeply threatened by monster homes and insensitive new oversized dwellings. The unique charm of our older neighborhoods will be gone forever if we can't provide more support for homeowners to maintain them, and convince people to restore and rehabilitate, not demolish.
- Bishop Museum
- Chinatown
- Everywhere (on O'ahu)
- MANY! Iolani Palace, Kaniakapupu, Kawaiahao Church.

- Dillingham Blvd.
- The old Palama Theater near Tamashiro's Fish market. It should have been preserved years ago for its Chinese architectural features, some of which still remain.
- Some of the State-owned historic cemeteries like the one in Kalihi on School Street.
 The homeless are pitching tents on historical graves.
- Kyoto Gardens at Honolulu Memorial Park
- Niniko, Frederick Lowrey Residence, Nu'uanu, Oahu
- Queen Emma Summer Palace

- Waipahu Depot Road and surroundings
- The Heiau under H3
- Koa Ridge Ranch house
- Ewa Plantation Manager's House and the rest of the district
- Fort Kamehameha housing (2)
- Jodo Mission in Haleiwa
- Yes, my 100 year beach house on Sunset Point Oahu. Built by Judge Skinner Davis.
- Marconi Station, Kahuku

O'ahu

- Haiku Stairs
- Waikalua Loko Fishpond, Kāne'ohe
- Kailua
- Maunawili Valley--homes and cultural sites
- Queen's Retreat/Hedemann House (2)
- Pali Lookout
- Pāhonu Pond, Waimānalo
- Wawamalu and Makapu'u State Park because vehicles drive in there
- Hawaiian burial cliff grounds above Aina Haina Elementary
- Kuli'ou'ou Park and the Wild Bird Sanctuary, Kanewai Stream

- Former Spalding House/Contemporary Museum of Art
- Honolulu Star-Bulletin (Advertiser) Building
- I love the Art Moderne buildings on King St. and in Kapahulu
- Queen Theater, Kaimukī. This would be awesome to restore for live shows. The neighborhood has trebled in population (monster houses) and could use another performance, graduation space....
- Ka'au Crater, Kaimana Beach, Queen's Surf
- Waikīkī Natatorium War Memorial
- Diamond Head homes. Plantation homes.
- Noela Drive

Many respondents also expressed statewide concerns:

Archaeological and historic sites; pre-contact settlement areas, agricultural sites, heiau, trails and shorelines.

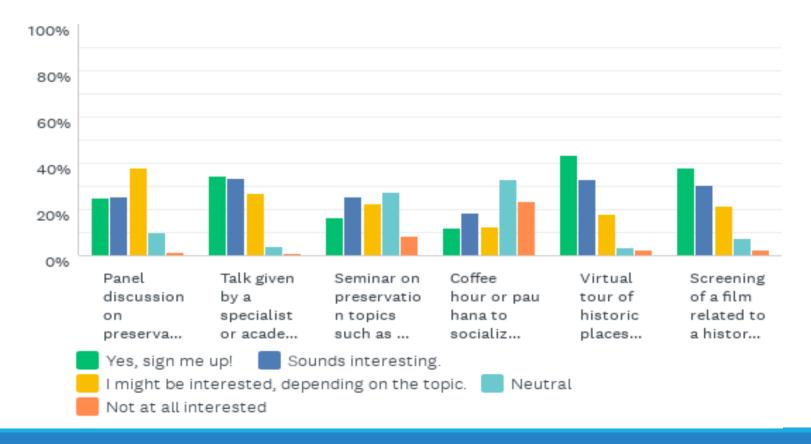

All of them, really. Development and utility values so frequently overtake historical values that all sites require thoughtful consideration.

Lots. Houses of worship that have lost their supporting congregations. Plantation sites forgotten.

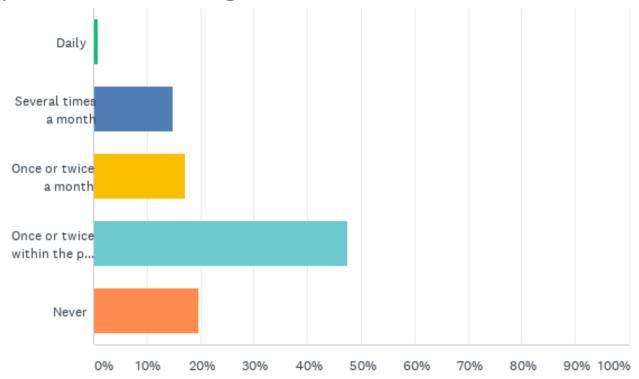

Residences being replaced by monster homes.

Single-family dwellings created by the great local architects.

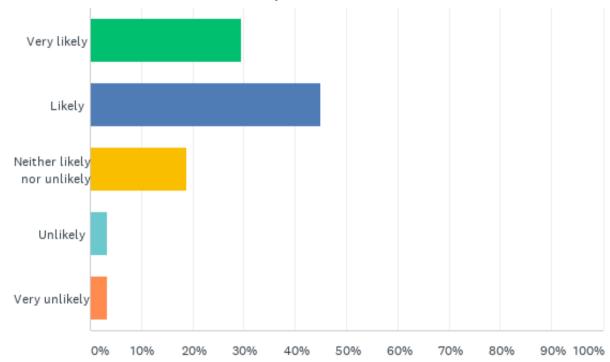

Q5: During the pandemic restrictions on in-person gathering, we are adjusting our programming. Please indicate your level of interest for each of the following online activities.
